

THE CHARITY SECTOR

Charities (sometimes referred to as the voluntary sector) are a part of the Third sector - part of the economy or society comprising non-governmental and non-profit-making organisations or associations.

As opposed to a private company, they do not exist to make a profit, with their sole mission to provide a service, solve a problem in society or do good.

They are reliant on funding from others, including the government, local authorities, companies and individuals.

There are over 160,000 charities in the UK with a total turnover of approximately £48 billion in 2018; over 800,000 people work in the UK charity sector.

In Sheffield there are over 1000 charities covering a wide range of areas and including well known local charities, such as St Lukes Hospice, the Sheffield Children's hospital and Sheffield Cat Shelter. There are 100s of small charities, often run only by volunteers or one or two paid staff.

Working in the voluntary sector doesn't mean you won't get paid! Charities have paid employees, as well as volunteers, and are always on the look out for skills such as finance, marketing, communications and administration, as well as front line workers. It can be a very rewarding career choice!
